What's new in DOA6 Morphing Ninja Costume - Honoka:

The Tiger Tank now incorporates more firepower. In order for it to work though, some modification had to be done to the tank itself.Unlike vehicles with a flat design, the Tiger needed to integrate a gun shield to have the gun aimable.This was done by building a new hull and adding a small thin wall under it.In order to make the wall more bulletproof, additional armour was added. However the hull needed to be built a little taller to compensate for the extra thickness.This meant that the track and the return roller needed to be moved forward to allow space for the added height. This is the finished product, and it was built by using the PC3D modelling software and a dedicated tank.This includes a model of the same vehicle with a pre-built track and many other components. Some video demonstration has been done in order to put this into perspective for those that are not familiar with machining and building. Some modifications on the original Tiger II model were implemented, such as giving it a larger suspension system, giving it the ability to carry more ammo and a bigger hull. The original Tiger is the basis for the Tiger Tank in this mod. The track system is based on the Panther Tank Mechanism by LAPLAN or the original Tiger II by Tank Overlay and Spitfire's development. Changes are made to the original Tiger to implement new features and add more to the game. The Tank follows PC3D scripting, which is perfect for reproducing real-life experience as closely as possible without actually building anything.The Tank can fully replicate the base game movements and the inner-combustibility system. The Tank can also fire fast automatic and slow automatic ammo.Even though the auto fire does not continue for long, it is still a bit annoying to have it taking up constant ammunition while the player is in a completely "safe" area like inside the main base. The Tank is able to move and roll just like a normal tank, but it has some special functions that the player can use.Almost every Tank is able to roll, but for this Tank, there are several special modes which may not be 100% accurate to the behaviour of the real Tiger II.Special wheels are created which will add to some movement and handling mechanic, including an ability to move while in the kneeling position. Conclusion: This is probably the worst tank ever built, a worthless piece of sh*t that should be in a museum, but for
