I have to find the inverse of the function. I tried this: def inv(f): def g(x): return f(f(x)) return g And this is the error message: TypeError: 'NoneType' object is not callable I think this is because the function g return None I have try this: def inv(f): def g(x): return f(f(x)) return g() But now is ok But why the second option return None?? And the first option has problems? A: If you want g to return a sequence of numbers, the function should be called with an integer argument def inv(f): def g(x): return f(f(x)) return g(1) The object g is an empty function here, so it can't have side-effects. If you need g to return None if the function f returns None, you should have a look at the reduce function: def f(x): return x+1 def inv(f): return reduce(lambda x, y: f(y), f(x), None) A: First you need to fix the error. def inv(f): def g(x): return f(f(x)) return g(1) In Python None is not callable; it doesn't return a value, it's

Q: Manually select tab and switch to it I am automating on a web application with Selenium using Java. I have a count of URL pages (one after another) that I need to always stay on, and that does not include the homepage, so I need to find some way to manually select an existing tab to switch to. Can't be done using Actions. Googling around didn't really help either. Any suggestions? A: I have used JSS (Java Scripting Suite) through Selenium quite a bit. You can access JSS simply by executing it on your browser: JSS\jssor\api-reference\jssor.open(count); If that does not work, check that you are executing the correct JSS, and JSSor count is a number. This works with most browsers. To find the tab, try getting the selected element: XPath: jssor_getSelectedElement. Method 2 Alternatively, in a webbrowser, you can use the following to get the current
